6 heavy training in the power bodybuilding mode

Powerlifters and bodybuilders are like quarreling brothers. Some differences they can never fully bridge, and yet, for better or worse, they remain closely related. They do many of the same exercises; bodybuilders squat, deadlift, and bench-press, just as powerlifters crank out sets of triceps extensions, barbell rows, and dumbbell flies for accessory work.

A few bodybuilders — most especially Johnnie Jackson, Stan Efferding, and, in his early years, Ronnie Coleman — have combined powerlifting and bodybuilding to great effect. They've ended the tiff and used a lower-rep, power-intensive approach to bodybuilding to become both stronger and larger.

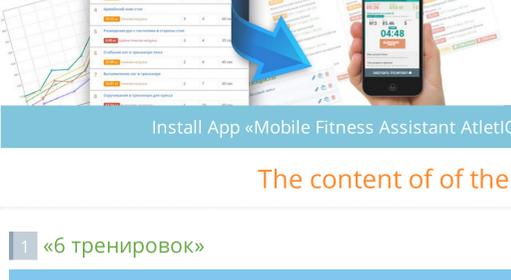

ENTER POWER BODYBUILDING

The idea is that prioritizing strength gains, with the big three lifts, will ensure steady progression in both weight on the bar and muscle on your frame. After all, your body is an adaptive organism that naturally resists the change and stress you place on it in the form of weightlifting. So haplessly lifting weights for a generic rep scheme won't get you too far. Your body will figure it out and stop growing. But slowly and steadily increasing the load you're lifting on a weekly basis is a new stressor for your body to adapt to.

In addition to focusing on the three power lifts, the other thing that distinguishes power bodybuilding is its emphasis on heavy sets of relatively low reps. Most sets should be in the six- to eight-rep range. Strength is the goal, not the pump, so skip techniques like dropsets and supersets. Instead, rely on forced reps or controlled cheating to eke out another rep or two. Watch power bodybuilders Branch Warren and Jackson charge through a brutal session, and you'll quickly understand that—on exercises like pulldowns, dumbbell laterals, and EZ-bar curls—they'd rather loosen their form to keep a set going than stay strict and miss out on that extra rep. After all, it's those extra reps over the course of a workout that are crucial to growth.

General recommendations on training with AtletIQ

AtletIQ — a universal platform for creating training programs. All trainings are performed using a mobile application which is an interactive smart timer.

- The load in the programs is calculated relative to the maximum weight with which you can do the exercise for 1 repetition. This indicator is also calculated and adjusted automatically in the future.
- This application requires access to the Internet. There is also the opportunity to train on the special training Form, data is transferred after a workout to your personal account and are considered in the following training.
- During training, you will carry out step by step application and assess the level of load obtained after the completion of each set.
- The application will compare your score with the planned load and adjust the level of your performance in the up or down so that you will always receive a predetermined level of load according to the program.
- On training days, on which work is scheduled to failure, take care of the presence of helper
- If you go back to training after a long rest, your power rates will be recalculated in accordance with the duration of the break.
- Try to set the weights as close to the calculated considering the capabilities of your gym
- Precisely follow the instructions on the pace of the exercise, if they are specified. Otherwise, the load level will not match the planned.

How to use mobile assistant?

Universal programs designer AtletIQ allows to keep workouts in a special format that can be used by mobile app.
